Tap the Gmail icon to open the app. Go to the menu button and select Settings > Add account. In the Set up email screen, choose Google. In the Gmail sign-in screen, enter an existing Gmail address and select Next or select Create account and follow the prompts. Enter your credentials and information as prompted. In the Gmail Settings, the new account is listed below your previous account. This article explains how to configure multiple Gmail accounts on an Android. It includes information on why you might want to have multiple Gmail accounts. Instructions in this article apply to Android 2.2 and above and should work with any Android phone. Gmail is Google's free email service that does much more than send and receive email. If you have more than one Gmail account, you can configure an Android smartphone to use all of them. Adding one or more additional Gmail accounts to your Android phone is a straightforward process. Tap the Gmail icon on the phone's home screen or find it in the application list. In the upper-left corner of Gmail, tap the menu button to display additional options. Scroll to the bottom of the menu, then tap Settings. In the Settings page, tap Add account. In the Set up email page, choose Google. The phone takes a few seconds to load, and depending on its security, prompts you for a password. That's because you're adding a second Google account to the phone by adding this email address. When it's done, the Gmail sign-in screen appears. Either enter the existing Gmail address or select Create account at the bottom of the page. If you enter an existing Gmail address, press Next to continue. Follow the on-screen steps to enter your credentials and other necessary information. When you're done, the Gmail Settings appears. The new account is listed below your previous account. After you add the second account, both of the Gmail accounts are linked to your Android phone, and you can send and receive emails from either of the accounts as needed. There are many reasons to have more than one Gmail account. Having separate accounts is one way to separate personal email accounts from work email accounts to preserve a work-life balance. This way, you can go on vacation and ignore your work email account while staying in contact with friends and family. A separate Gmail account can be used for non-essential email, for example, to sign up for promotions or other marketing-related programs such as newsletters, sale alerts, promotional emails, and sweepstakes registrations. When you give your email address to these sources, they send lots of messages. If that promotion or sweepstakes sells your email address and information to another legitimate organization for marketing purposes, your inbox is going to fill with even more messages. Finally, less reputable sources of spam can obtain your email address, and the result is a lot of junk email. With a separate Gmail account, these messages are collected in one place, away from your important personal or work email inboxes. You can choose to ignore that account and avoid sifting through the junk to find important messages. Gmail also provides filtering help with email messages, so even in your marketing and promotional email account, spam and junk mail can be separated from those newsletter and sale promotions you are interested in. One of the best benefits of your Android smartphone is being able to keep track of your email wherever you go. We take a look at the three most common email providers: Gmail, Outlook, and Yahoo. Keep reading to learn how to set them up. If you are setting up an email account with additional security (like a work or school email), make sure you contact your IT department to see what additional steps you'll need to go through to verify your account. Gmail is the easiest email provider to set up on your Android device, since it comes preinstalled. All you will need to do is sign in to your account. Here's what you do: Tap Settings > Accounts. Depending on your phone, you may have to hunt through the Settings to find Accounts. Sometimes, it's located under the Personal section. Tap Add Account > Google. This will bring you to the Add Account screen. From here, you can either set up a new Gmail account or enter your existing email address and password. Tap Accept on the Terms of Service page that follows, and your account should be ready. Setting up Yahoo email on your Android device follows a similar process. Tap Settings > Add Account. Tap Email, then tap Yahoo mail. If you don't see the option for it, you can download the app free from the Google Play Store. Enter your existing Yahoo email address and password or choose to set up a new email. You will be given a few options, like adjusting how often your email syncs and what you'd like your display name to be with outgoing mail. After you've chosen the options you would like, tap Next to finish your account setup. Open the Google Play Store and download the Outlook for Android app. It's a free download. If you're setting up a new account, tap Get Started. It will automatically detect some of your account information. If you're accessing an existing email, open your phone's Settings, then tap Add Account > Outlook. Enter your email address and password. If it requires additional information, it will inform you what is needed. Thanks for letting us know! Get the Latest Tech News Delivered Every Day Subscribe Tell us why!
